

(INTERVIEW)

A MUSE FOR ALL SEASONS

Since making her debut in Italian Vogue at 10, Cara Delevingne has become a force to rival the 'supers' of decades past. Here, she discusses her unique style and London's eclecticism

From baseball caps emblazoned with the word 'Bacon' to an understated Stella McCartney two-piece at the dramatic Met Ball, Cara Delevingne's original-yet-inspired style has made her one of the most influential forces on the UK fashion scene. And one of the most lucrative. It's no wonder, then, that the 22-year-old is consistently chosen to be the face of some of the most iconic brands around. Stylist caught up with her on the set of Pepe Jeans' s/s 2015 campaign – shot in the courtyard of London's Somerset House and styled by fashion powerhouse Charlotte Stockdale – to tease out the style secrets from a fashion one-of-a-kind.

You're known for breaking rules when it comes to fashion. How would you describe your own style?

My own personal style is whatever I want it to be that morning. It's usually something casual that I feel comfortable in; something youthful or quirky. It depends if I want to dress up; I could feel like a dinosaur or I could feel like a ballet dancer.

What sort of impact has living in London had on your fashion choices?

London is always changing. No-one is scared to do new things, especially young London designers. It's all about taking eclectic styles, things from the past, and various different colours, and mixing them together to make something completely new. I admire so many styles, even if I don't look good in them – I never want to say no to anything. The wackier the better.

How would you describe the world's key fashion cities – London, New York and Paris – in just a few words?

London is original, creative, iconic, influential and graphic; New York is edgy, definitive and organised and Paris is classic, elegant and timeless. Très chic. Er, I need more words!

What does the fashion industry mean to you?

For me, it means the biggest, most unconventional family and support group I could ever have. It's irreplaceable.

Cara Delevingne is the face of Pepe Jeans' s/s 2015 Made For Mischief campaign; pepejeans.com

CARA AND HER PEPE JEANS – COMING TO A BILLBOARD NEAR YOU

CARA WAS CROWNED MODEL OF THE YEAR AT THE 2014 BRITISH FASHION AWARDS